An Index to Irish Immigrants
in the New Brunswick Census of 1851 1

FOREWORD

We are pleased to have the Provincial Archives support the publication of An Index to Irish Immigrants in the New Brunswick Census of 1851. In this association we meet several aspects of our mandate under which we collect and preserve materials having a bearing on the history of our province and copy and publish historical information for dissemination. The Index is unique in its gleaning of information on Irish immigrants from New Brunswick's earliest extant census and the coupling of that information with other data, and, most valuably, in its linking of a high proportion of the New Brunswick settlers to their place of origin in Ireland. It constitutes an exceptional research resource that will both stimulate and facilitate further studies of the Irish in New Brunswick.

Clearly further studies in this area are required. Archivists are in a good position to judge this as they can easily keep a tally of ongoing and potential research. They are the link between the original diaries, letters, maps, and reports and the researcher laboriously seeking the answers to his questions. New Brunswick's archivists are gratified to see, as in this case, the many wonderfully rich sources woven together to tell part of the story of our collective past. However their satisfaction is often outweighed by the frustrations of knowing of records not yet safely housed in archives or, worse still, irretrievably lost to wanton or deliberate destruction. Almost as frustrating is the fact that many records in archives are not yet organized or described adequately for use and that a myriad of subjects and research puzzles go uninvestigated.

There are unfortunately too many areas of New Brunswick's past which remain unexplored, sometimes because the records to document them have been unavailable, sometimes because interest in them has been lacking. But as often, the reason is that there has been an absence of researchers, or of support for researchers to undertake the studies. New Brunswick is without a comprehensive, general provincial history and there are innumerable local or specialized topics which should be researched and presented in articles or monographs which are essential as the foundation for larger studies. The consequences of these gaps cause concern whether it is the unavailability of an adequate text to provide the background for academic study, or a brochure that would be used to accurately and interestingly inform a prospective business investor of the forces that have influenced the development of our province. This situation must be rectified so we can better understand our experiences, failures, and successes, so that we can better interpret our past, and so that we can gain strength from our pride as a people.

The limitations of our past understanding of the history and contributions of the Irish in New Brunswick exemplifys this neglect. By their numbers alone - they were the largest single ethnic group in nineteenth century New Brunswick - we are alerted that this group had a significant impact on the development of our Province. We have not known who they were, what they experienced, or what contributions they made. But their legacy is obviously more than the Irish place names that dot our maps and the Mc and O' surname prefixes which still enlarge the directories of virtually every community in New Brunswick.

The inattention to the Irish and the reasons for and results of this situation are well outlined in an earlier volume edited by Peter Toner, Historical Essays on the Irish in New Brunswick. Treatment of the subject has not been easy, to some extent, because of the absence of readily available documentation on both sides of the Atlantic. However solid sources of information do exist in such records series as the Immigration Administration Records, the records of County Councils, and the Customs House Records. Peter Toner has taken the lead in using a number of these sources in compiling this Index. It is hoped that its publication will contribute to their being fully mined and will support the burgeoning interest in Irish ancestry and New Brunswick Irish history to ensure that past omissions are remedied.

INTRODUCTION

The New Brunswick Census of 1851 is the most important single source for the study of Irish immigration to the province of New Brunswick. It is also the most important single source for the genealogical record of families who were in the province by the middle of the 19th Century. For years past, portions of the census manuscripts have been published through the co-operative efforts of the Provincial Archives and various groups or individuals, and these volumes have become familiar to everyone involved in genealogy or social history.

I have been under some pressure (mainly well intentioned) from people in both New Brunswick and Ireland to edit the present volume and, during the summer of 1990, I found that I could not dig in my heels any further. This volume represents a by-product of research which, although it shares many of its techniques with genealogy, is different in its objectives, and therefore is somewhat different in its means.

Six years ago, I had given in to internal pressures that were equally intense. Down to that point, I had done some rather disjointed demographic work which attempted to compare the Irish in 19th Century New Brunswick with their neighbours of different ethnic backgrounds. This work persuaded me that the Irish, as an ethnic group, had characteristics which differentiated them from others, and that these were transmittable from the immigrants to their children and grandchildren. But I realised that to be more fully persuasive, these characteristics needed to be demonstrated on as broad a pattern as possible.

There were several options available. I had already built up a reasonable number of case studies based upon the populations of civil parishes throughout the province. These could have been multiplied quite readily, but there always would be the nagging question of just how typical these parishes might be. Another alternative was the random sample approach using the whole province. For example, every tenth head of household might have been sampled to discover group characteristics. This approach would have been fine for a fixed point such as a census, provided that such a study were to be limited to the data contained in the census, without the possibility of correction or enhancement from other sources or a relationship with any other census.The decision I made at that time was to attempt a complete study of all of the Irish in New Brunswick over a three census period, with enhancement and corrections from all possible sources. I have often thought since, that I had bitten off far more than I could chew just trying to gain control of one census.

Since no comprehensive nominal return of the New Brunswick population was carried out prior to 1851, the only place to begin such a study was with that enumeration. This particular census is extremely important for two reasons: it is relatively complete, and it contained a question related to the date each immigrant arrived in the province. This latter bit of information is found in no other comparable record for any province in British North America. Naturally, the missing manuscripts from this census are a great loss. Two counties (Gloucester and Kent) are totally missing, along with most of Queens, major portions of the City of Saint John and its county, and minor portions of other counties. We all hope, ever more in vain, that some day these missing manuscripts will materialise, dusty or not.

The data related to every identifiable Irish immigrant and every identifiable offspring of Irish immigrants were entered into a computer data base. The information has been subjected to as much enhancement as possible from every available source, a process which continues. For example, every bit of evidence which could be conceived was used to try to identify the Irish county of origin for each immigrant. At one early stage I ventured that such information on 10 percent of the immigrants would reveal a tremendous amount about the Irish who came here, but I secretly harboured a hope for 15 percent. The sense of accomplishment which I felt the day I discovered that I had passed 20 percent will be exceeded by far if I can manage to find the exact birthplace for a further 381 immigrants and thereby reach 30 percent.

Similarly, I felt that the religious denomination of the immigrants was too important to ignore. Anyone with any feel for Ireland, past or present, will understand this. The 1851 census did not record this information, so I was forced to recover it from a variety of sources, such as obituaries, church records, and the like. The most important source was the census of 1861, which did record religion. The problem attached to this is that many might have changed their religion during the interval between the 1851 census and the date of whatever source was used to establish this information, some of which was earlier and some later. Thus, although there can be no absolute guarantee that the stated religion was that which was actually confessed at the time the census was taken, it does represent the best information available for each individual. I would be surprised if its accuracy did not exceed 90 percent.

There have been corrections to the census data. Date of arrival, as recorded in the census, has been cited as unreliable by some who have bothered to work with this source. In fact, it is far more reliable than I would have predicted. In demographic terms, a scholar would never work with such data on a year-by-year basis. Using the criterion of five-year cohorts, it is reliable. Having said this, two types of errors do show up. Usually the date recorded in the census seems correct, but it can err by showing a date a year later than the actual arrival date. The best guess I can make is that the enumerator simply asked the respondent how long he or she had been here, and the response indicated residence where the census was taken, rather than arrival in the province. The other error seems to have been related to responses which indicated "about twenty years" or something of the like, so that "1831" and "1841" seem to be over-represented. It often is possible to verify the date of arrival from other means, such as shipping records or land petitions, and no example springs to mind of a correction of more than three years. In any such case, the evidence, such as an entire family appearing on a ship's list, would need be overwhelming.

Age is another problem. The age grouping in the census data approaches the humourous. The people in the last century were not especially concerned with exact age, and the data which seem to indicate responses such as "forty" or "about 50" create a statistical nightmare. The volume of people who were "45" or "55", compared to a year on either side, render broad age cohorts absolutely necessary. When exact age could be determined from better sources, this was used, but often two or more usually reliable outside sources could disagree by as much as three years. A comparison with the ages recorded in the 1861 census reveals that an individual could gain as few as five or as many as fifteen years instead of ten. Age, as recorded in any early census, should be taken as a rough guide, of relative importance only.

The greatest single problem which will confront anyone using the following index is the spelling of names. It is an unavoidable conclusion that the people of the early 19th Century were even less fussy about the exact spelling of a name than they were about exact age. Everyone who has done any amount of genealogical work will attest that the greatest difficulty lies in the determination of whether "Mannis Dority" and "Manus O'Daugherty" were indeed one and the same. In this case, the odds they were are extremely high because of the rarity of the given name "Manus", but the substitution of "John" or "Mary" complicates the problem beyond salvation.

If the reader will be indulgent, the problems facing a researcher in my position will become obvious, and perhaps a certain amount of latitude will be tolerated when the index is used. The research from which this index is derived was dedicated to the discovery of such things as the relative number of skilled tradesman who came from Cork as opposed to those who came from Donegal, or the average number of children in a Presbyterian family as opposed to the average in a Catholic family. Although questions like these might sound odd, they are fundamental to an understanding of these immigrants. Searching the census to find the "Manus O'Daugherty" recorded in the passenger list is a waste of time since the census enumerator recorded the same individual as "Mannis Dority" - a waste of time unless spelling discrepancies are overlooked.

An attempt to match individuals in the 1851 census with those of the 1861 census in any exact manner based purely on spelling would be even more hopeless, especially since we are talking about thousands of names which were most often recorded in an indifferent fashion. Manus may have had his surname recorded in a dozen different spellings, and his cousin "John Gallagher" may have had his recorded in nearly as many.

Yet, this particular problem is child's play compared with others. "Mary Neel" may have been "Mary O'Neill" or "Mary McNeill". If she were recorded as a lone passenger, or as a servant in a census, she might never be matched in any other source, but the problem would be lessened if we could ascertain which she was, "O'Neill" or "McNeill". Naturally, it follows that families are easier matched than lone individuals.

There are other problems of matching which are even more difficult, and sometimes impossible. Many of these immigrants came out of an Irish language background. This could produce different complications. An immigrant with little or no English might have his or her name recorded phonetically by an enumerator who possessed not the slightest ear for Gaelic nomenclature, producing hair-tearing difficulties for people like myself. There are usually accepted English versions of Irish names which may differ only slightly from the Irish, but which may involve enormous leaps. One of the most extreme examples would be "Patrick Peoples" on a passenger list. He might have been recorded in the census as "Paddy Deeney". Even more frustrating is when some families gave English versions of their family names to the enumerator in 1851, and then an Irish version to the 1861 enumerator. Sometimes, as can be seen from the above example, these names could be very different.

Similarly, a glance through the index will demonstrate that some of the most common surnames in the province were borne by immigrants from Ireland. Many people automatically assume that the name "MacDonald" (or "McDonald") is Scots. This is a fair assumption, but the name is found in many parts of Ireland, from Antrim to Cork. There have been people of that name in Ireland since the 13th Century, and it is no less "Irish" than "Roche", "Barry", or "Fitzgerald". One should be very careful before labelling a name "not Irish". If a name was borne by any number of Irish immigrants, then it is an Irish name. In cases such as "Wilson" or "Johnston", we are not talking merely about names borne by thousands throughout Ireland, but also names which could well have started as Gaelic Irish names as well. More to the point, most major surnames in the index were borne by both Catholic and Protestant. Surname alone is a poor guide to religion, and one should never assume that the Protestant Irish are all descended from immigrants from England or Scotland and are therefore not really Irish. Somewhat on the same point, the prefixes "Mac" and "Mc" mean absolutely nothing in the differentiation between Irish and Scots. As recently as a century ago, such small distinctions meant little to anyone, and before that were often simply rendered as "M'".

It is also of some interest that some of the most obscure surnames in Ireland can be found in the index below. There are some surnames which are still more common in the telephone directories of New Brunswick than in those of Ireland, and here I am discussing Gaelic Irish names.

My task as a social historian would have been impossible without compromise in the matter of names. A strict rendering of the names as spelled in the 1851 census would produce close to 7,000 surnames for 21,000 immigrants. The only reasonable recourse was to a standard rendering of surnames, and to a certain extent of given names as well. I have no doubt that this will not please everyone, especially those who insist on exact spellings right down to whether or not the name retained or dropped the "O". All I can say at this point is that such standardisations were necessary to accomplish the principal task of my research. If any readers take offense, I offer my apologies and beg their indulgence. Please remember that for my primary purposes, the identification of individuals amongst several different listings has been by far more important than preservation of the enumerator's exact idiosyncrasies of spelling.

The data from the 1851 census indicate that most of the immigrants came voluntarily, and out of circumstances that were at least above the level of poverty. Of course there were immigrants who were destitute, but the apparent ease with which the majority adjusted indicates that they usually had something going for them. What is perhaps more clearly revealed is that New Brunswick was a harsh host. Immigrants who arrived here aged twenty or more did fairly well compared to those who arrived aged fifteen or less, and they in turn did better on the occupational scale than children born here of immigrants. Why this should be so is still a mystery which needs resolution. Although I have been aware of this phenomenon for years, I have not been able to discover any good explanation.

Easier to explain is the difference shown by the data on the occupational scale between Catholic and Protestant. Some recent scholars have attempted to prove, unconvincingly, that any perceived social and economic differences between Catholic and Protestant Irish are small and insignificant. The data from the New Brunswick censuses of 1851 and 1861 demonstrate that there were differences both large and significant based upon religion. My findings in this matter were published in an article which was labelled by a colleague as understated and conservatives. The differences are there. Anglican Irish immigrants were better off than Presbyterians, and both were better off than Catholics. These differences had nothing to do with the date of immigration, and persisted for their children born in New Brunswick.

Part of the explanation is clearly the Irish background. There were and are poor Protestants in Ireland as there were and are rich Catholics, but ever since the dawn of modern Irish history, Protestants have been economically and socially superior to Catholics. Thus the average Protestant immigrant to New Brunswick would have had a head start over his Catholic neighbour. Literacy can provide a clue to this. Although at some stage a systematic study should be made of literacy, my impression from an examination of the land petitions is that the Protestant immigrant was more often literate. Some Catholics were indeed literate to the point that more schools were taught by Catholic Irishmen than by any other class of people. There is a regional bias as well. Most of the Protestant immigrants came from Ulster, and my impression is that Catholic immigrants from Ulster were more often literate than those from other parts of Ireland. The data from the 1851 census show conclusively that Catholics from Ulster were higher on the occupational scale than those from other parts of Ireland.

Another matter which is related to religion is family size and shape. Many people have indicated over the years that they believe Catholics had larger families and that these families clung together more than Protestant families. The evidence shows the opposite. Protestants had larger families, and more often had uncles, cousins, grandparents, or some other peripheral relative in residence. This very well could have been a function of affluence, in that the better off could afford to keep an extra mouth. One indication of this is that Ulster Catholics had larger and more complex families than their southern and western counterparts. Catholics from Connacht had the smallest and least complex households, which is not surprising since that is the poorest part of Ireland.

While I am busy here trying to lay at rest some of the misconceptions related to Irish immigration, it is perhaps appropriate to attempt yet again to deal with the Famine. Contrary to some published criticisms, I have never argued that the Famine was a minor event in Irish history or that not many people came here as a result of the Famine, or indeed that famine or the threat of it was a minor event for the people of Ireland. I have argued, on the basis of the evidence of the 1851 census, that the vast majority of those in New Brunswick with Irish blood owe that blood to ancestors who arrived here before the Famine, and that the overwhelming majority of the Famine immigrants to this province disappeared very quickly by further migration. Most of the Famine people who stayed in the province did so because they came to join relatives who had arrived earlier - sometimes much earlier. Yes, the Famine was important, but not as important to the present population of Irish ancestry as the earlier immigration. And yes, there were some differences between the earlier immigrants and those of the Famine, but none of any real significance. New Brunswick was more Irish than anything else long before the Famine. If anything, the Famine was the "last hurrah" of Irish immigration to this province.

A glance through the index will show that there were at least a few Irish in even the most remote corners of the province. There was scarcely a community which did not have an Irish presence, and far more which had almost nobody else. Many areas which were settled after Waterloo were little patches of Tyrone or Cork, transplanted into the wilderness, but even the older settlements like Maugerville were riddled with immigrants living as tenant farmers on the long-cleared fields. In fact, some of the heartland of Loyalist New Brunswick had been transformed into Irish communities by immigration.

Unfortunately, differences of religion and politics have served to cloud over the enormity of this change in character which occurred during the first half of the 19th Century. The political divergence between Catholic and Protestant Irish which the immigrants brought with them continued, and possibly got worse. The Protestant allegiance to the Crown gave them common cause with the Loyalists and others, and the result was that many of these people disremembered their Irish roots. The Catholic Irish could not integrate so easily, and sometimes became belligerent in their Irishness. After a couple of generations, most were willing to agree that "Irish" meant "Irish Catholic", and therefore a settlement labelled as "Irish" was Catholic as well. Through this process, some of the most exclusively Irish settlements in the province are not remembered as such, and yet page after page of the telephone directories for some areas of New Brunswick could have been ripped out of the directory for Northern Ireland. Did Loyalist society absorb the Protestant Irish? In some areas, perhaps, but in many broad regions of southwestern New Brunswick, the opposite is far more probable. Possibly the best clue, especially for New Brunswickers of my generation or older, was the multiplicity of Orange Halls. Whatever a rural community might lack, it usually had an Orange Hall. The names on the roadside mailboxes for miles around an Orange Hall in New Brunswick would be familiar to many postal clerks in Northern Ireland today.

This can be complemented by another phenomenon which I have observed during my work. There are some townlands in Ireland which have become depopulated over the past 150 years. These include townlands which have contributed sometimes many emigrants to New Brunswick, whose descendants can still be found where they settled so long ago. One string of townlands along a side road near the town of Limavady sent over a dozen families to one locality in New Brunswick during the 1830s, and now these families have disappeared completely from that side road in Ireland, but still survive here. Many of the last emigrants to leave Ireland probably had more relatives here than they were leaving behind. Since I have only begun this stage of my work, it is probable that future research will reveal many more examples of this type of phenomenon. Thus, many New Brunswickers who might hope to find living relatives in Ireland may be faced with a hopeless task, even if they know the exact origin of their family. Quite literally, their families came here, and are no longer there.

The impact of Irish immigrants must have been the most important feature in the development of New Brunswick during the first half of the 19th Century. Although these people had been arriving in this area before it became a province in 1784, following the battle of Waterloo the floodgates were opened, bringing large waves of emigration from the British Isles.

Emigration from the British Isles has been studied, as has been immigration to North America, but very seldom has a scholar been able to join the two successfully on a broad scale. On a very small scale, there are now quite a few studies of specific families on both sides of the Atlantic. Long derided by scholars as "mere genealogy", these studies constitute a collective resource which is rapidly gaining the attention of social historians. After all, enough families taken together make a community, and enough communities can make a nation.

In addition, some researchers have found the necessary evidence to piece together migrations embracing groups of families involved in chain migrations from one locality on the other side to one locality on this side. This has been especially important when dealing with the Irish, since the common view for so long was that Irish emigration was mainly a function of individual enterprise, which seldom involved the chaining seen and reported so widely with other groups of more recent immigrants.

All of these studies have been extremely important to our understanding of the whole process of immigration and its impact on society. For New Brunswick, such studies have been critical. This province has been built up on the basis of immigration in the relatively recent past, and yet we are still groping for an understanding of the society which this immigration has produced. As example, I firmly believe that one particular phnomenon of the politics in New Brunswick during the late 1980s and apparently the early 1990s will never be satisfactorily explained until much more is known about the Irish immigration on the value structure of the southwestern half of the province.

This immigration, then, has been and continues to be important if we are to understand ourselves. And yet as recently as twenty years ago, almost nothing was known in a scholarly sense. There were stories handed down in many families that few bothered to record, and that fewer still bothered to dissect and study. Naturally, these stories included a good bit of retrospective creativity. In fact, I have often thought that any study of the immigrant adjustment to society in New Brunswick must address the question of selective memories and traditions.

While engaged in this research, I have learned an enormous amount about the Irish immigrants who came to New Brunswick, and in turn an enormous amount about society in this province as well. But what is striking is my growing awareness that I still have much to learn. Work of this kind is never finished, and tasks which once seemed relatively simple have turned out to be much more complex. The simple task of filling in the blanks for such items as religion is endless, although the demographic patterns have long since assumed a remarkable degree of stability.

The index below contains errors -- I have no doubt of this fact. Many of the ages cited are obviously wrong. Difficulties of manuscript legibility make it probable that many names are also in error, notwithstanding the above explanation. It is obviously important that any errors which can be detected in the index be corrected, so any assistance in this regard would be welcomed. Additional information is also welcome, such as the maiden or married names of females, so many of whom become "lost" because of the assumption of their husband's surnames. Incidentally, only one enumerator kept track of the maiden names of wives, and only a few bothered to record the exact place of birth of the immigrants. Had more done so, we would know much more than we do about our ancestors and the society they built.

I should like to express my gratitude to the many who have rendered assistance in the past. Over the years I have employed a number of student assistants to generate and input data, and most of these were worth more than the paltry wage I was able to pay them. The staff of the Computing Centre, University of New Brunswick, Saint John, have always been helpful, especially Eric Eastwood, who will be as glad as anyone to see me move on to a more contemplative stage in my research. Colette Keith, Divisional Secretary, will be glad to see me retire after years of patient assistance with my work. Marion Beyea and her staff at the Provincial Archives of New Brunswick have proven to be of enormous assistance over the years, and I will single out Denis Noel as the most effective "cattle prod" behind this volume. Naturally, the countless people who have written with information on their families over the years must be thanked both for that information and for the sense of satisfaction that comes from knowing someone is actually interested in the results of such work.
